Conditions

The standard conditions set out in this booklet are designed to assist planning officers in dealing with applications in an efficient and consistent manner. They cover most of the circumstances where conditions will be needed, but they are not exhaustive. Some cases will require one or more of the standard conditions to be amended, or a completely new “non-standard” condition to be drawn up.

Some of the standard conditions require text to be inserted or deleted, depending on the particular circumstances of the case.

Circular 11/95 “The Use of Conditions in Planning Permissions”) provides detailed guidance. This guidance has been used in drawing up the standard conditions, many of which are based on the model conditions contained in Appendix 1 of the Circular.

Conditions must fairly and reasonably relate to the development proposed. Circular 11/95 sets down six tests that conditions should meet. These are that the condition should be:

- a) necessary;
- b) relevant to planning;
- c) relevant to the development to be permitted;
- d) enforceable;
- e) precise; and
- f) reasonable in all other respects.

Reasons

Local planning authorities are required to give reasons for the imposition of each condition [Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995, Article 22].

A suggested reason for each standard condition is given. In general, the use of these will assist in ensuring that applications are dealt with efficiently and consistently. However, it is important to check in relation to each condition to be imposed that the wording is appropriate to the circumstances of the case. If not, the case officer should revise or replace it. If difficulty is experienced in formulating the appropriate reason, this would suggest that the condition is not, in fact, necessary.

It is essential that the operation of the planning system should command public confidence. The sensitive use of conditions can improve development control and enhance that confidence. The use of conditions in an unreasonable way, however, so that it proves impracticable or inexpedient to enforce them, will damage such confidence and should be avoided. The imposition of unreasonable conditions can result in an appeal against that condition, and subsequently the application for, and award of, costs against the Council.

When applications come to appeal, the Secretaries of State or Planning Inspectors welcome reasoned suggestions from the parties as to conditions that they would find acceptable if permission were granted. Such conditions will be fully examined and may or may not be adopted, but conditions will not be imposed if they are considered to be invalid or if they are unacceptable on policy grounds.

Additional considerations

Requesting details during the application stage.

- The assessment and discharge of details submitted in relation to planning conditions is often time-consuming, and may create a considerable administrative burden on planning officers, in addition to the additional fee requirement for the applicant for the discharge of conditions. It may also hamper general efficiency, for example, necessitating multiple site visits by an officer to check details as they are submitted.

- It is quite reasonable to request details of landscaping, site levels, materials, boundary treatments etc during the lifetime of an application, enabling the Officer or Members to make a decision on the basis of a thorough and detailed application, with a corresponding reduce number of conditions. This method of working is also preferable with regard to matters that require a separate professional assessment, such as highways or arboricultural matters, as the relevant consultee will be more likely to be able to give a fully informed opinion on the merits of a scheme before a formal decision is made. An early assessment of new applications is necessary here, in order to allow time for an applicant to submit any required details.

Pre-commencement conditions.

- In order for development/use to benefit from planning permission, it is necessary to comply with the conditions attached to the decision of the planning authority. Therefore, where a condition is required to be discharged 'prior to the commencement of works' is not complied with (and works begin on site regardless), then the development will not actually benefit from the consent. There is no 'Breach of condition' as such in this instance. Instead the works will comprise unauthorised development and may require enforcement action.
- Therefore, when attaching a condition that is required to be discharged prior to the commencement of works (and which cannot be addressed during the lifetime of the application), consider whether these conditions could be assessed during the initial construction phase.
- For example, the initial phases of work on a major site, such as demolition and site clearance, may have implications regarding some planning conditions, (the protection of trees on site, for example), which might therefore require the submission of details prior to the commencement of works. However, the same initial works are unlikely to affect the reasonable assessment and discharge of other details, (for example, new landscaping). Therefore, it may be appropriate to assess such details during the construction phase, and re-word the condition accordingly.

Informatives

Informatives are notes for the applicant that are included in the decision letter. Their main purpose is to provide guidance on matters such as the need to obtain other statutory consents or to comply with other statutory requirements or details of reserved matters (in the case of outline permissions). They are advisory only and should be kept as simple and non-legalistic as possible. Detailed references to legislation are in most cases not particularly helpful to the applicant.

As a general rule, informatives that advise the applicant to contact another department or agency should contain full and up-to-date contact details (name, address, phone number and e-mail address – where known). The text of all informatives that refer to another department/agency should be cleared with the department/agency first.

The list and schedule of informatives cover most of the matters on which information or advice may be required. However, new or "non-standard" informatives may need to be added (for example, to advise the applicant to consult a neighbour about a particular aspect of the development).
